Tus Philadelphia Record says: "It is said by and on behalf of Mr. Randall that he will carnestly support a measure of tariff reform framed in accordance with the declaration of the Chicago platform. Mr. Randall's sincerty may not be doubted, but there is considerable difference of view as to the scope of the Chicago tariff deliverance. Suppose Mr. Randall should fail to agree with the Committee of Ways and Means and the Committee of Ways and Means and the Democratic majority of the House on a tariff bill, what assurance have they that he would not use the position of Chairman of the Appropriations Committee to the art its passage? This is not a question which personally affects Mr. Randall, but it is one which relates solely to the public business of legislation. Neither he nor any other man in this country is large enough to interpose his personality between the representatives of the people in Congress and the work they are pledged to account plate. He would be the first to scout the pretension of a member of the Republican minority to occupy a parliamentary position which could be used to balk the legislative purpose of the Republican minority to occupy a parliamentary position which could be used to balk the legislative purpose of the majority. What claim can Mr. Randall have to greater consideration as a member of the Democratic minority on this question of first importance? As long as be is not known to be in hearty accord with the Democratic majority in the House on the question of tariff reform it endangers the success of that movement to place him again where he can respect his obstructive maneuver of the last Congress."

Through the hour-glass of time.
Dritting o'er life's restless ocean,
Swiftly borns upon its tide,
Our frail barks are kept in motion,
With ownide power to guide.
Dritting on ward, ever drifting,
Off dark billows o'er us roll;
Yet, with light from beaven ritting,
All may reach that sunbright goal.

Still, earth's gay and vain attractions
Often wield a fatal power
O'er our lives and o'er our actions,
Though we're drifting hour by hou

Though we're drifting hour by hour The sitent voice of earthly pleasure Allures us, ever to destroy; Twere wisdom then to seek for treast That is free of all alloy. We're but weak and ering mortals, Yet, with faith's strong oars applied When we drift through death's dark p The rearly gates will open wide. Abordeen, Ohio, Nov. 18, 1955.

Firw Yonx, Nov. 18.—The inhabitants of the little town of spring Valley, N. Y., are much excited over the romantic marriage of Miss Alice Honorford to Gerare Person, son of a harness-maker in the town. Miss Horstord is the daughter of Honry E. Horstord is the house of the many resorts about New York. Having tried the Catsaillefant year hey decided to genet the summer they war at Spring Valley. Accordingly, rooms were engaged at the house of Matthew Feren, a harness-maker, and soon after July 4 Mr. and Mrs. Horsford and their daughter look up their shods beneath his roof.
